

AI Meeting Notes Are Slop.

Most auto-summaries are just transcripts of transcripts. Here's a 3-part prompt that I use which actually works.

01 - CURRENT STATE

Their perspective + concerns

02 - TOPICS

What was discussed

03 - NEXT STEPS

Tight list, no fluff

3

Sections

1

Paragraph (Current State)

0

AI Slop

THE PROBLEM

Default summaries miss everything that matters.

PROBLEM 01

No perspective

It recaps what was said — not what the other person actually thinks, feels, or is worried about.

PROBLEM 02

It's noise, not signal

Reads like a transcript of a transcript. Everyone gets the "what" but never the "why."

PROBLEM 03

Useless for follow-ups

You still have to rewrite everything before you can send it to a client or hand it off internally.

3 sections. That's it.

"Give me a one paragraph 'current state' as explained by [Name], including their concerns.

Next, summarize the topics discussed.

After, add a tight list of next steps."

Paste this after any prospect or client call. Replace [Name] with whoever you met with.

Step 01

CURRENT STATE

Write it from their perspective.

This isn't a neutral recap. You're asking the AI to step into the prospect's shoes — their words, their frame, their concerns.

THE SECRET WEAPON

You'll know immediately whether you actually understood the problem — or just thought you did.

OUTPUT LOOKS LIKE

"From their perspective, the core concern is that their current tooling doesn't give the team visibility into..."

The rest writes itself.

02

TOPICS DISCUSSED

The real substance of what happened

Not a transcript. Not bullet soup. A clean summary of the actual conversation — ready to forward internally or drop into a CRM note.

03

NEXT STEPS

Tight list, paste-ready

Crisp actions with owners. The kind of list you can drop into a follow-up email without editing a word.

The output: a summary you'd actually send to a client or hand off to your team — not something you have to rewrite.